

Above — The armored car had a camera mounted at the stern with which motion pictures were taken of the parade.

Copyright, International Film.

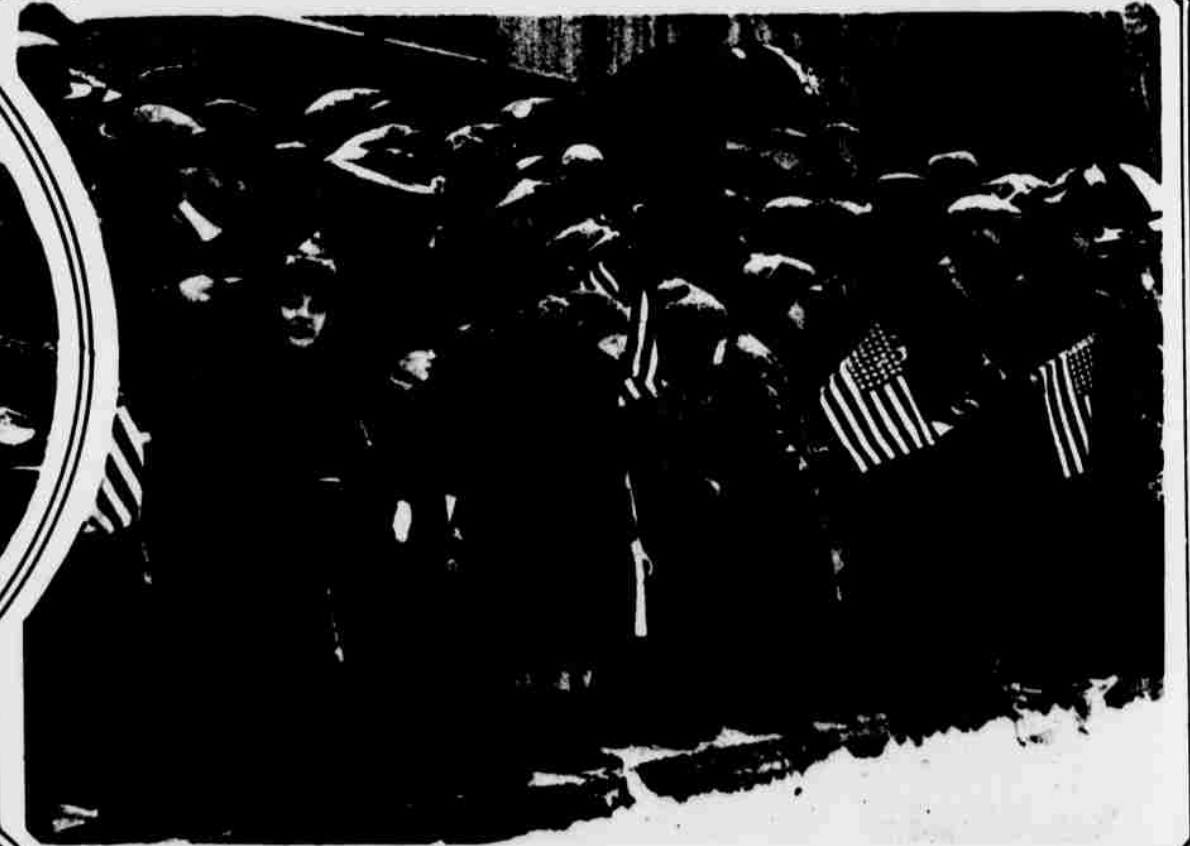

The troops from Camp Upton marching in the snowstorm past the reviewing stand at the Public Library on Washington's Birthday. The parade, in which 10,000 men took part, gave New York a spectacular demonstration that the raw material sent to Yaphank last autumn had been transformed into well trained soldiers.

Copyright, International Film.

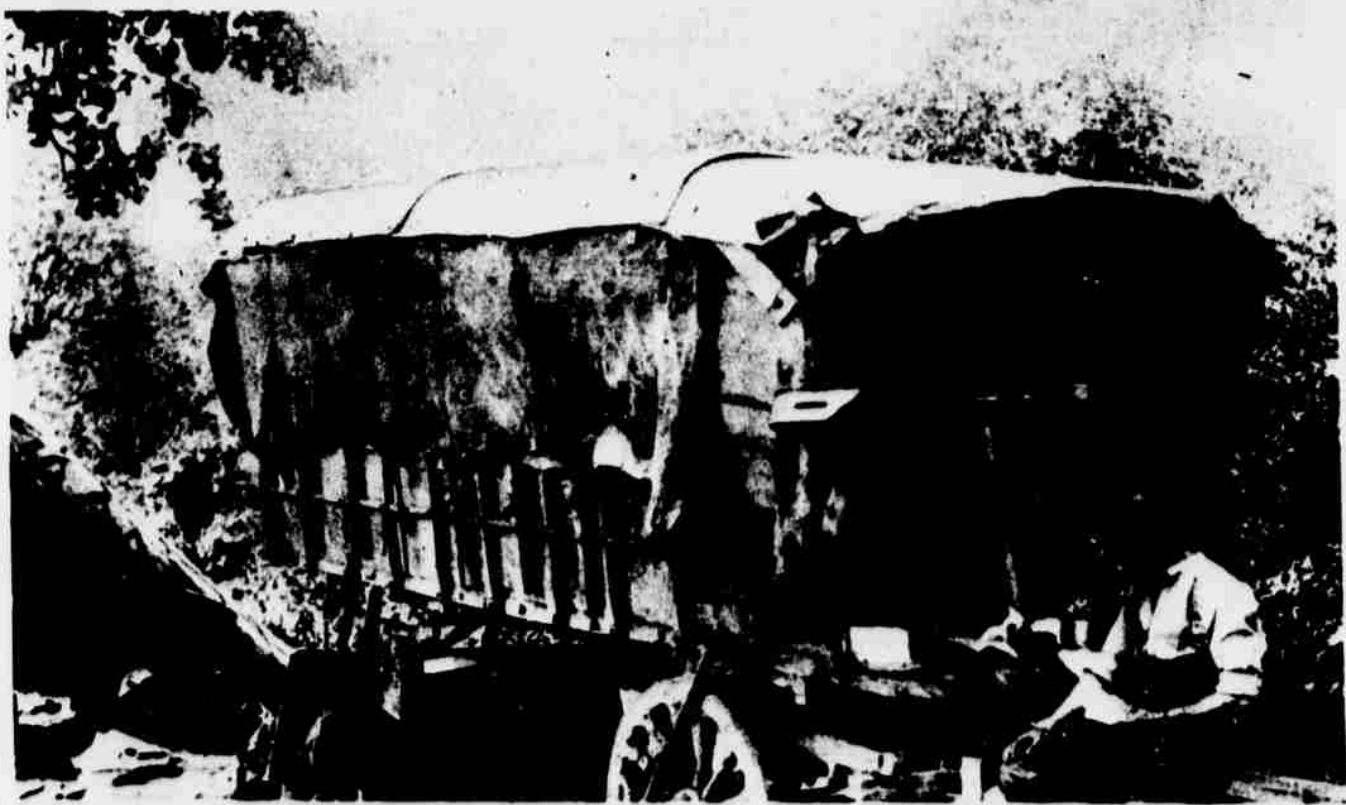

In the reviewing stand at the Public Library. Front row, from left to right—Brig.-Gen. William A. Mann, Brig.-Gen. Evan M. Johnson, commander of the Metropolitan Division at Camp Upton; Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, Lieut.-Gov. Schoenck of New York, acting Mayor Alfred E. Smith and Grover Whalen, Mayor Hylan's secretary.

Photo by Paul Thompson.

New York's greeting to her own men of the National Army. In spite of snow and biting wind, hundreds of thousands of women and children and, of course, men lined the curb to cheer the soldiers from Yaphank.

Photo by Paul Thompson.

A Canadian post office at the front "Over There." It may not be beautiful, but it is one of the most popular institutions in camp, keeping, as it does, the men in touch with home. Before it broke down it was an army transport wagon.

Photo by Central News.

Washington's Birthday, 1918, is memorable as the day when for the first time in New York city women registered as voters. Miss Frances Gallogly is shown registering in the Sixteenth Election district of the Nineteenth Assembly district and proving her equality with man by telling her age truthfully.

Copyright, International Film.